

Honest Publishing Presents Jazz

Devote a place on your bookshelf to Jazz, the gorgeous new poetry collection by Pushcart Prize nominee J anpaul Ferro.

The follow-up to Essendo Morti – Being Dead (Goldfish Press, 2009), Jazz develops J anpaul Ferro’s considerable observational talent and poetic merit. Perfect for your commute to exorcise the repressed, sweating and fevered demons, or relaxing with a glass of wine in the evening after a hard slog, Jazz zips across, punchy and provocative, evoking Beat and post-Beat but without aping either.

Original, tender and moving, Ferro tells it like it is, bruising and raw: ‘yes, you are a white rat sitting in a white cage, just like the rest of us -’ He writes of Richard Yates and the cardboard American dream: ‘a white picket fence around it in sublime irony - you and I: naked and suicidal upstairs in bed.’ Honest Publishing continues its tradition of publishing edgy poets, and Jazz is no different. Here are meditations on relationships, day-to-day struggles, war, love and living in Providence, Rhode Island.

Perhaps more than anything else, Ferro is a topical poet interested in the world around him. He writes: “The struggles that are actively taking place in country after country, the social ills that are right under your noses, war, poverty, injustice, the destruction of planet earth and its eco-systems are primed to be recorded by writers and poets.”

So prick up your ears and take note. Jazz by J anpaul Ferro is out now. Long live poetry.
